SPEAKERS

Natalie Walker

Natalie has over 15 years experience across small business, government, not for profit and corporate sectors in various management and non-executive roles.

Her latest venture – Inside Policy – is a national collaboration of policy wonks, political operatives and technical geeks who love making the world a better place by designing new solutions to complex social and economic policy challenges. One of the ways they do this to build apps like Slice of Pie to better understand open government data.

Prior to founding Inside Policy, Natalie established Supply Nation, a social enterprise designed to integrate Indigenous Australian owned, controlled and managed businesses into the supply chains of Australia's largest companies and government agencies.

In 2012, Natalie was named as one of Australia's 100 Women of Influence.

Kirstie Parker

Kirstie is a Yuwalarai Aboriginal woman originally from north western NSW.

With more than 25 years of experience in community leadership, management, journalism and communications, Kirstie has been a passionate advocate for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people and a constructive contributor to national dialogue about issues relevant to all Australians.

She's a Director of Reconciliation Australia, and was elected Co-Chair of the National Congress of Australia's First Peoples, a role that saw her co-chair two important national non-partisan campaigns for equality – the Close the Gap Steering Committee around Indigenous health and life expectancy, and the Change the Record Coalition around Indigenous incarceration and experiences of violence.

Kirstie helped to forge an unprecedented alliance of Indigenous and ethnic organisations behind a successful community campaign supporting the Racial Discrimination Act 1975, and has been a key influencer in the process to meaningfully reform the Australian Constitution to recognise Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples and their rights.

Since October 2015, she has been the CEO of the National Centre of Indigenous Excellence (NCIE) based in Redfern, which delivers life-changing programs for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people, especially youth.

Llanasa Peachey (Delores)

Deloris is the CEO of MWAH SEO Digital Marketing Agency, helping local businesses improve their online presence and increase customers to their doors.

She has 6 years in Digital Marketing and experience as a Digital Strategist - developing online marketing plans, but as a Web project manager she was responsible for managing web projects and is a Search Engine Optimisation specialist.

With ICT skills and experience in ecommerce she has co-founded the first ever indigenous ecommerce portal for Maori called EMAori. It is a new indigenous online shopping portal promotes authentic Maori creations by Maori providers within their own space.

Delores has huge involvement in education governance as a board member of their Kura Kaupapa Maori in Hastings. It was a natural progression that her skills would lead her to become an active executive member of the Digital Maori Forum where she is the acting treasurer of the organisation.

Delores has many interest but her family is her foremost interest, But she is active within her cultural kapahaka group who were fifth place at the Kahungunu regional's.

Rei Sciascia

Ka nui te mihi.

Rei Sciascia is a product of Rock college in Waipukurau and was educated in the university of life. He graduated as a realist with a passion for Information and Communications Technologies with a focus on Maori ICT participation and management.

He began working in the computer industry in late 1992 as a log assessor who built his own self taught visual basic database to assess forestry blocks. In 2001 after starting his own ICT business he realized that just being a designer was not special and so he began hosting services as well. This led to an understanding that the pinnacle in this industry was end to end, so he began his journey to join the connections industry, launching the first and only Maori business operating a microwave WiMax broadband network in the world. This business is called SwiftNet and is still operating today.

Rei's passion for Maori participation in ICT is an ongoing quest, Rei is the current chairperson of the Digital Maori Forum. He draws on his many relationships within the political and business arena's to help bring the Maori ICT participation to an outcome of excellence.

Kia Ora Koutou kaatoa.

"You don't know what you don't know"

Delilah MacGillivray

Ms Delilah MacGillivray (nee Domic) is a proud woman of Kalkadoon and Australian South Sea Islander heritage. Delilah has a Bachelor of Arts Degree in Psychology and Sociology and has over 30 years' experience in senior Public Service roles in both Federal and State Government agencies. Her current role is Business Support Manager with the Helem Yumba Healing Centre, the only Indigenous managed and funded Domestic and Family Violence service in Queensland.

Delilah's roles and experiences are broad, including but not limited to, a Sergeant with a ten year service in the Australian Regular Army, seven years as a researcher for Aboriginal Hostels Limited identifying accommodation needs for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people, four years in Centrelink leading the focus on Indigenous service delivery culminating in a National Statement of Reconciliation and extensive Regional Director leadership and governance experiences in the Departments of Transport, Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Policy, Community Services (including Contract Management), Sport and Recreation and Child Safety. Delilah has also lead whole of government coordination of service delivery to the discrete Communities of Woorabinda and Cherbourg.

Delilah considers herself to be an influencer of change for the betterment of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples.

Raymond Pratt

Raymond Pratt is the CEO of AllGrid Energy, an Indigenous owned renewable technology company.

Ray followed his early dream of becoming an electrician and spent many years working in remote Australia. Witnessing first-hand the impact of restricted and intermittent energy access to remote Indigenous communities, Ray came to the firm belief that renewable technologies will be the catalyst for Indigenous self-sufficiency and empowerment.

In pursuit of this growing passion, AllGrid Energy was established to offer renewable technology solutions to Indigenous communities and the broader domestic market. Recently back from addressing the First Nations conference in Canada, it is clear that Indigenous communities all over the world are seeking greater self-determination through clean energy solutions.

"As an Indigenous Renewable Technology Company, we have a compelling story of hope and inspiration. And As the climate crisis deepens we need innovative solutions to entrenched problems when it is clear business as usual simply isn't working." Ray Pratt, CEO AllGrid Energy

Paul Paton

Paul is an Aboriginal man from the Gunnai and Monaro tribes of southeastern Australia and, since 2003, is the Executive Officer of the Victorian Aboriginal Corporation for Languages (VACL). Paul has extensive experience in developing and producing new resources through community language programs, language revival training and working with government departments in the area of language policy and curriculum.

Paul believes that language is central to our identity, who we are and our connection to country. Language and culture are inseparable and knowledge of culture results in the strengthening people's identity. Language revivification contributes to the wellbeing of Aboriginal communities, strengthens ties between Elders and young people and improves education in general for Indigenous people of all ages.

Dr Simon Dunstall

Simon Dunstall leads the Decision Sciences program in CSIRO's Data61 business unit.

Data61's mission is to promote a flourishing national ecosystem of researchers, developers and innovators in digital technologies and data-driven businesses.

The Decision Sciences program has 110 staff and a much larger network of collaborators, and has foci including social media analytics, information systems engineering, natural hazard risk modelling, and finance and superannuation research.

An important part of the program's work involves articulating the future roles of digital technology in enhancing Australian communities, and understanding the potential of these digital technologies to either narrow or widen societal gaps in opportunity, inclusion, and advantage.

Professor Peter Radoll

Professor Peter Radoll is the inaugural Dean of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Leadership and Strategy at the University of Canberra.

Being one of Australia's early Indigenous graduates in Information Technology, and now recognised as one of Australia's leading Aboriginal STEM academics, he has a passion for Indigenous Science, Technology, Engineering and Mathematics.

His PhD examined the adoption and effective use of ICTs in Remote, Rural and Urban Aboriginal households. He has taught and researched in Information Systems at the Australian National University, the University of Newcastle and the University of Canberra.

He is one of the four authors of IDX's foundation document, and was an author and key driver of Inspiring Australia's Indigenous Engagement in Science report. He has worked with Digital Careers Australia, in both the ACT and NSW, and has been a judge for Young ICT Explorers. He is a patron for the CSIRO Aboriginal Summer School for Excellence in Technology and Science.

Dameyon Bonson

Dameyon Bonson, a Mangarayi and Torres Strait Islander man, is a Kimberley based social innovator and entrepreneur.

His expertise includes Indigenous suicide prevention and strategising Male engagement in Health. Dameyon's entrepreneurial work has many strands.

In 2013, he founded Black Rainbow Living Well for Indigenous LGBTI Suicide Prevention and is a National Advisory Committee member for the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Suicide Prevention Evaluation Project (Pro Bono).

He is also an Indigenous Human Rights Awards finalist (2015) and is currently designing an APP to reduce the stigma in men who work FIFO.

Lauren Ganley

Lauren Ganley is a descendant of the Kamilaroi people and General Manager of Telstra's National Indigenous Directorate. She has worked with Telstra for more than thirty years.

In her current role she leads programs and business activities that make a positive difference for Indigenous communities across Australia.

Lauren was a member of the Expert Panel (2011) to recognise Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Peoples in the Australian Constitution. She is currently a Director of Kakadu Tourism, Power Community Ltd and the Aboriginal Foundation of South Australia; an Ambassador for Indigenous Community Volunteers; a Fellow of the Australian Rural Leadership Foundation; and a graduate of the Australian Institute of Company Directors.
